Case study modified for Irish context

Crisis First Aid for Acute Stress Reaction

You live in a small rural town in Ireland. The town is quite run down and most of the buildings in the town are old and in need of repair.

One night a fire breaks out in the local post office and the fire spreads quickly to the adjacent buildings. The fire burns savagely and many businesses and homes are lost. Many of the locals pitched in to fight the fire and assist those who lost their homes and livelihoods.

Because it is a small rural town everyone was affected. You were lucky because your home wasn’t destroyed, but one of your friends lost everything.

The local churches and council sent counsellors to the town after the fire to help those who needed it. You become very concerned about your friend because he seems to be very stressed after the event. He is irritable, nervy and is not sleeping very well. He tells you he can’t stop thinking about the fire.

Write down the steps you would take to help someone having an acute stress reaction
